

Raymond Hardy lives in Worcester, MA. He attends Quinsigamond Community College working towards his human services degree. He chose human Service because he has always wanted to give back. The human service field has allowed him to understand the basic needs of people who wish to live the best quality of life with disabilities from all ranges and levels of society. He currently works two jobs, one as home Health PCA and another job at Notre Dame Healthcare as a prep cook and dishwasher. To date he has worked at Notre Dame Healthcare for over 2 years, he loves his job. He works with great level of compassion. Working with residents makes him feel like he is working with family.

He believes that Human Service is important. One of the wonderful thing is about this field is that you can not only see the work you are doing, but you can feel it. Going home and knowing that you helped someone makes him accomplished. He believes that in this field one can tackle mental, physical, emotional and financial support to many people who may not have the means to get this. People are his passion. He hasn't always had it easy while growing up. After utilizing many services throughout his life, he is thankful to be able to give back.